

If you're comfortable interacting with people, curious how the body works, and want to help others with their physical and medical needs, and a career in Health Science might be for you. While many jobs in this cluster entail direct patient contact, that's just the tip of the iceberg. From diet and nutrition to physical therapy, research science, and help information management, Health Science offers something for everyone who is interested in encouraging and enabling good health. Faster than average employment growth is expected for occupational and physical therapists, pharmacists, physician assistants, registered nurses, speech pathologists, and veterinarians.
