

A flair for making convincing presentations. A finger on the pulse of the marketplace. A knack for turning complicated ideas into clear communications. These are the qualities that define a successful career in the Marketing, Sales & Service Cluster. This family of careers is the engine of the global economy, providing consumers with the incentive they need to make informed purchases of goods and services. And behind every sale is a vast infrastructure of consumer service representatives, warehouse personnel, and other behind-the-scenes players who make the marketplace tick. The outlook for sales people and for those with college degrees is generally favorable
